

To Whom it May Concern,

I am Satellite Radio subscriber and investor in Sirius XM Radio.

As a condition of the merger, Sirius XM agreed to a 36 month voluntary price freeze for its basic subscription package. Over those three years they have just started becoming profitable. I feel they should be allowed to set the pricing they feel is required to stay profitable and be able to provide the quality service and content they provide now as well as improve content and service in the future. If they are not allowed to grow, their service will deteriorate, their content will leave for other up and coming competitive services, and they won't be able to compete in an ever changing market. Today it's pandora and the internet in vehicles, three years from now, who knows what it will be.

As a consumer I want them to be able to provide the best service possible. I and the rest of the market place will decide a fair price with a continued subscription, or cancel and use one of the many other up and coming services. As an investor, I feel it would be unfair to restrict Sirius XM while their competition has free reign to grow and develop products and services.

Thank you for your consideration in this matter.

Sincerely,
John Lynch
